INTRO

I recently spent an evening wandering around with a camera in downtown Carrboro and Chapel Hill looking to document the restaurant nightlife.

With the students back and the climate shifting to somewhat better eating weather, both downtowns were hopping. That was good to see.

It's been a tough summer for restaurants. Gas prices and a flagging economy — yes, even here — took their toll. Seats were empty, and at the end of the night tip totals reflected it.

So it's nice to have the crowds back.

Within the comfortable, UNC Surplus-furnished offices of One Citizen Tower, we had a running joke about changing the name of MILL to MEAL for this, our first food issue. We also scratched our heads a bit about what to feature as a MILLwork, a regular item on this page that highlights a particular work of art. MILLworks have included sculptures, photographs, silk-screens, paintings and drawings. But a work of food, well, that was a tall order — or at least it seemed like one.

Fortunately, there are a few local eateries whose food reaches into that artisan category.

After a few chats about what might be considered a food-based MILLwork, we settled on a Manhattan from Neal's Deli. Certainly informing our decision was an acquaintance with the deli's wares (it's 200 yards or so from Citizen Tower) and the fact that it is a new and popular spot. Where the artwork comes in is a key reason the place is popular. Matt Neal's pastrami and Sheila Neal's slaw and Russian dressing — the Manhattan's key ingredients — were the result of a little inspiration and a lot of perspiration. The Manhattan is also a work in progress, with tweaks to the process happening each time the smoker is fired up.

Matt and a couple of really good friends.

Smoked meats might not be your thing. Like a lot of art, the Neals' handiwork isn't trying to be all things to all people. There's plenty of cheap, lowest-common denominator food out there, and it's got all the aesthetic value of a sad-clown painting in a dentist office.

So celebrate the art of food with us. Included in this issue is an extended edition of our new food column, The Eater, a survey and directory of local restaurants and a breakdown of the rapidly growing number of greener grocers in our area.

As in every issue, we've also got tips on this month's offerings in music, arts, literature and theater.

Enjoy your MEAL.

AHEAD FOR FALL

FAREWELL, OLD FRIEND

There probably will someday be another restaurant that sells a pimento cheese and bacon sandwich or some variation on Elvis' favorite snack with peanut butter and bananas. But it's quite unlikely that you'll ever see something called an African-Tuna Melt on another menu anywhere. Nor will you be able to consume said sandwich in as eclectic an environment as that wonderful, funky world-within-a-world known around here simply as "The Skylight."

The loss of the Skylight Exchange, usurped of its building as of this month, has left a bitter taste in the mouth.

Skylight owner Dennis Gavin is reportedly contemplating setting up a used-record and bookshop sans food elsewhere. Dennis is a kind soul who was boss and mentor to many and a fellow intent on making the Skylight as much a community gathering spot as anything else. Time moved a little slower and life was a little richer once you passed through its doors.

NOODLE

The building that once housed the Wicked Burrito has generated at least two controversies that we know of — one at the beginning and one at the end of the restaurant's existence. In the beginning, the WB ran afoul of some folks by sporting a scandalous multi-colored paint job that clashed with the lovely faux-colonial-era Franklin Street around it. In the end, the building, which used to house The Trail Shop, sat eerily unused for years with tables still set for service and T-shirts ready for sale at the counter as if it could spring back to life at any second. It became a very visible symbol of the various deadzones that pocked Franklin Street.

Now 214 West Franklin Street is rid of that strange paint job and being readied for food service once more.

As the name implies, Noodle will be all thing noodly — potstickers, pho and what-have-you. We'll post a menu when we get one.

MINT

Not sure what the Indian places already in town thought about the banner that read "Coming Soon: First Upscale Indian Restaurant" hanging over the location of what is soon to be MINT. In particular, I think those who remember the dear departed Dalaat, which was located where Lantern is now, might disagree with that assessment.

STATE OF THE QUESO

Best complaint we've heard of late came when a patron of Armadillo Grill reached into their bag of goodies and found a smaller, regular-sized order of queso dip instead of the Texas-sized container he ordered. "This is Texas?" our friend asked, holding up the container. "More like Vermont."

CHEAP BEER PART TWO

Hat tip to a Mr. Whitebread of Carrboro who phoned after noting our request for anyone to top the super cheap Schlitz deal at Lowes in Chatham that we noted in our last edition of The Eater. (The price for a 12-pack btw is now up to $5.29).

Our alert friend says 24 cans of Pabst Blue Ribbon at the Harris-Teeter in Carrboro is $10.99. Close. Very close.

ONLINE REVIEWS

Where do you go for online reviews of local food and drink establishments? The long-time favorite is Chowhound, but Yelp has had a lot of local traffic of late and is worth checking out.

It's all about participation, natch. Updates are helpful too. Urbanspoon still lists Wicked Burrito, which closed in the last century.

While we're on the subject, The Eater has a new home online now at our MILL blog, where these little items will be posted throughout the week. www.carrborocitizen.com/mill. Click on The Eater category.

COME OUT & PLAY

The JimGin Farm will host works by many local sculptors on Saturdays from 4 p.m. until "the cows come home" throughout late August and September. To get to the farm, go out Jones Ferry to Willow Creek Shopping Plaza and then go 5.75 miles, turn left on Wild Horse Run, a gravel drive marked with a sign. The drive ends at Jimgin farm. For more information, call 942-3253.

HEWITT POTTERY

Renowned potter Mark Hewitt's newest firing was unloaded last week. The sale of the new works continues at W. M. Hewitt Poetry in Pittsboro on Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday from noon to 5 p.m. The new works include experimental works and colors along with more customary mugs and bowls. Hewitt was born to a family of china manufacturers and after deciding to produce studio, and not industrial, works he has been featured in the media and exhibited his work around the world. For more information, see www.hewittpottery.com, or call 542-2371 to arrange a special visit.

PLAYS AT LUNCH

The ArtsCenter launches its new series this month. Entitled "Plays at Lunch," the series is readers' theater for and by seniors. The series includes live theater, lunch and a discussion session. The gathering starts at 11:30 a.m. and shows are at 12:30 p.m. followed by a discussion at 1:30 p.m. Shows this month are Sept. 9, 10, 16 and 17. The play is Gifts from the Heart and tells the story of Gavin and Kathleen's magical evening in a backyard garden.

POTLUCK IN A PASTURE

ChathamArts' "Potluck in a Pasture" — a chance to enjoy locally grown food, visit a sustainable farm and meet several artists — will be held Sunday Sept. 14 from 5 to 7 p.m. at Castle Rock Gardens. The farm is located at 3232 Castle Rock Road in north Chatham County, west of N.C. 87 between Pittsboro and Chapel Hill. Visitors are asked to bring a potluck dish that includes at least one locally grown ingredient (and the recipe to share, noting the origin of local items) as well as a beverage, lawn chair or blanket, and a donation to ChathamArts. For more information, see www.chathamarts.org, or call 219-9840.

The second and final potluck of the season features Travis Cohn, a "reptire" artist who creates reptilian forms and furnishings from retired rubber; Gwen Higgins, a potter, jeweler and culinary artist; Ramona Leftwich, a dancer specializing in African traditions; writer Tim McKee, managing editor of The Sun magazine and author of No More Strangers Now: Young Voices from a New South Africa; and bluegrass musicians Doug and Stacey Stuart.

Castle Rock Gardens, owned and operated by Ristin Cooks and Patrick Walsh, offers a variety of heirloom vegetables and fruit, shiitake mushrooms, heritage chickens, dairy goats and honeybees.

Ingredients for your potluck dish may come from your own garden, neighboring farms or from local farmers' markets.

MUSIC SPOTLIGHT

OLD 86

Old 86 is a high school band made up of five teens, ages 14 to 15. Joe McPhail, Christopher Stevens-Brown, Neal Dempsey, Daniel Fields and Mie Hirschfield, all of whom just finished their freshman year at Carolina Friends School, have been playing separately for many years, and formed Old 86 at the start of their freshman year and have been growing in popularity ever since. They've landed two gigs at the Cat's Cradle and a time slot on The State Of Things. Old 86 plays the Carrboro Music Festival at Fitch Lumber at 1 p.m. on the High School Showcase stage.

THE CARRBORO MUSIC FESTIVAL

The Carrboro Music Festival returns for year number 11. On Sunday, Sept. 28 this small town will once again explode into a festival of harmonies, melodies and good times with over 150 groups performing at venues all over town. The festival will present amateurs, pros, rockers, country and classical, all within the space of a few blocks. Down at Town Hall, vendors will sell festival food and kids can play and make arts and crafts. A biodiesel bus will ferry folks to and from the park & ride lot behind Carrboro plaza. Stages are placed up and down Weaver and Main streets, stretching from The ArtsCenter to Town Hall and also down Greensboro Street. Mark your calendars for the last Sunday of the month (or if you live in Carrboro, just wait until you hear the music), then hop on your bike and come down to hear the music for which Chapel Hill and Carrboro are famous.
