WATER FROM THE SKY

We may just exit September having notched the average rainfall for the month – all of it coming in the past few days.

The dry spell we've experienced, along with a stretch of 90-degree days that went relatively uninterrupted from June to last Sunday, made the break in temperatures all the more pleasant and revived ancient memories that water occasionally falls from the sky.

The rain-triggered burst of lush green going into fall belies some of the damage done. This has been a tough year for gardeners and growers. Many of us lost a good many plants and even a few trees.

At our homestead, the dogwood off the deck, which I've written about many times for its colorful heralding of the change of seasons, turned brown and dry a couple of months ago. At this time of year and again in spring, it was the most colorful thing in view from the windows of my typing room. Now it is covered in damp dark leaves and serves mainly as a perch for wrens and a route to the squirrels' rooftop Acorn Festival.

This summer has taken its toll. Even those of us who traditionally revel in it took to complaining. For a few days last week, time seemed to stand still while we waited on the rain and performed various rituals – leaving the car windows down, not bringing in the laundry or the porch-furniture cushions and so on – to guarantee its arrival.

Unlike the past few months when what few storms there were seemed to split up and bypass southern Orange County, Sunday's rain was the real thing, and a good, slow soaker at that.

And while there was widespread disappointment that the music festival was shy a few outdoor venues, the coolness and the soaking were welcomed throughout the parched lands of the eastern Piedmont.

WEST END WONDERS

While policy-makers and pundits continue to grouse about the rise and fall of Franklin Street, downtown's West End has quietly, steadily and successfully grown into a destination all its own with an eclectic blend of shops and eateries along its tree-lined sidewalks.

Also part of the revival has been the return of Festifall, which turns West Franklin Street from Graham Street to Mallette Street into an arts and music midway. See for yourself this Sunday from 1 to 6 p.m., when the festival promises another dazzling afternoon of fun for the whole family.

There'll be dozens of artists with works on display, samples from five downtown restaurants –Carolina Brewery, Vimala's Curryblossom Café, 411 West, Kildare's and Sugarland – and plenty of interesting booths to browse through.

And all day long, you're invited to do some dancing in the streets. Katherine Whalen Et the Fascinators, Holy Ghost Tent Revival and salsa orchestra Charanga Carolina are the featured acts for the main stage, which is located near Local 506. Semi-Formal, The Drowning Lovers, the 18-piece Durham Jazz Orchestra and Above Gravity (the all-girl rock band and winners of the 2010 Orange County High School Battle of the Bands) perform at the Showcase Stage near McDonald's.

Park-and-ride services are available throughout the festival and parking is free at downtown lots on Rosemary Street.

Visit townofchapelhill.org/festifall for more information.

WOOTINI

REMEMBERING HALLOWEEN

Downtown Chapel Hill may be better known as the hot spot for Halloweeners, but in the past few years Carrboro has started to develop its own celebrations beyond its traditional role as a refuge for those fleeing the crowds and craziness of the big city next door.

This Friday, you'll get a chance to get a jump on the holiday via the opening of "I Remember Halloween," a group show featuring a mix of spooky works by local and national artists.

The event, which runs from 7 to 11 p.m., is also the opening celebration for the newly relocated Wootini Gallery, which now shares space with The Merch at 101 Lloyd Street.

Offering up artworks featuring robots, monsters, zombies and rather fetching witches are Jonas Britt, James Rheem Davis, Kevin Herdeman, Mike Hoffman, Ron Liberti, Danny Miller, Eric Morin, Motorbot, Martin Ontiveros, David Rose and Adam Saul.

Visit wootinigallery.com/ for more information.

SHAKORI

SHAKORI PICKS UP STEAM

The folks at Shakori Hills Community Center are pushing hard to finish out the year well on their way to putting a down payment on the farm where they hold their festivals and community events. So helping the center become a permanent settlement is one of the goals of this year's fall GrassRoots Festival of Music & Dance, which runs Oct. 7-10.

To help deliver the message, organizers have lined up an impressive range of acts, including the Marshall Tucker Band, Carolina Chocolate Drops, Donna the Buffalo, Peter Rowan Bluegrass Band, Sarah Jarosz, Chatham County Line, Missy Raines & the New Hip, Preston Frank, Toubab Krewe, Plena Libre, Samantha Crain, Locos Por Juana, The Old Ceremony, Jill Andrews and Katharine Whalen & the Fascinators.

Festival tickets are on sale now and available by phone and at shakorihills.org/tickets-info. Four-day passes are $90 in advance and $100 at the gate. Kids 12 and under are free. Day passes are $25 (Thurs), $35 (Fri), $45 (Sat) and $25 (Sun). Youth prices (13-15) are $12, $17, $20 and $12. Tent camping is $10 per tent and vehicle camping is $50 in advance and $60 at the gate.

FALL IN LINE

Stilt walkers, giant puppets, drummers and residents young and old with lots of locally produced art will move down Churton Street in Hillsborough this month during the town's third annual Handmade Parade.

The Hillsborough Arts Council has spent much of the summer holding workshops and classes for anyone who wants to create something proud to parade, and the fruits of the labors of artists of all stripes will once again render the event replete with sights and sounds that are truly wonders to behold.

The theme for this year's event is "Eno River Rhythms" and there will be special tributes to the waterway that is the heart and soul of our county seat.

The parade gets started at 2:30 p.m. on Oct. 16.

If you're interested in participating, there's still time to get in on the fun. For details, visit the arts council's parade site at handmadeparade.org

A GUIDE TO EATING

END OF SEASON

Two of the happiest people The Eater has seen of late are Peregrine Farm's Alex and Betsy Hitt, who announced with big smiles at Saturday's Carrboro Farmers' Market that this was their last market of the year. There's still plenty to do, as they also grow for local restaurants. But their elation at saying good bye to this hot and dusty season was quite evident.

For the last few markets, Alex has been showing folks what to do with an abundance of late-season peppers, utilizing some kind of former composting contraption and a gas burner. Whether you want to get this fancy or not, pepper roasting is a great way to hang on to those summer flavors.

PINE NUT WOES

Freezing pesto is another common way to stash away some of the season's bounty, but be aware that The Eater has heard of a handful of local cases of pine mouth, a taste disturbance experienced after eating pine nuts. Those who have experienced it say a metallic or medicinal taste lingered for days. Check out this recent update from Epicurious at epicurious.com/articlesguides/blogs/editor/2010/09/pine-mouth-strikes-again.html

STATE MAY INCREASE OYSTER TAKE

We could see a bigger supply of oysters this season. State fisheries officials are considering a move to up the allowed take from Pamlico Sound. Rising demand and a resurgence of the oyster population are driving the rule change. According to the N.C. Marine Fisheries Commission, oysters are now at levels they were prior to devastating red tides in the mid 1980s, with a rise of 400 percent in the last four years.

SPOTLIGHT PEPPER FESTIVAL

PEPPER FESTIVAL

Pittsboro vying to become the sweet pepper capital of the Piedmont? Pretty darn cool. But habanero pale ale beer – well, sir, that's the product of true inspiration.

Triangle Brewery will tap that presumably endorphin-firin' brew and there'll be 40 varieties of mostly sweet and some hot peppers on hand at the third annual Pittsboro Pepper Festival this Sunday from 4 to 7 p.m. at The Plant in Pittsboro, hosted by the Abundance Foundation and celebrating the pepper prowess of Farmer Doug Jones of Piedmont Biofarm. Farmer Doug has been working on sustainably grown pepper varieties well suited for North Carolina for more than eight years now.

"We share Doug's vision of peppers becoming a staple in the North Carolina diet," said Tami Schwerin, executive director of the Abundance Foundation. "Peppers are a huge source of vitamin C, vitamin A and do well in our climate," Schwerin said. And they go quite nicely with a habanero pale.

Twelve local chefs will create dishes using Farmer Doug's peppers and Holy Ghost Tent Revival will offer musical accompaniment.

A TELLER OF TALES REMINDS US WHERE WE'VE BEEN

BY VICKY DICKSON

Daphne Athas on the Road. PHOTOS BY ARTHUR LAVINE

Every town needs keepers of its history, especially towns that exist in a constant state of change and towns that have come to be the focus of aspiration and dreams. Those towns in particular are in need of clear-eyed historians who will notice, and point out, the worm in the apple, while also fully appreciating the apple's beauty.

So we're very fortunate to have in our midst Daphne Athas, whose just-released Chapel Hill in Plain Sight: Notes from the Other Side of the Tracks tells the unvarnished truth about an often-mythologized place. The essays in Athas' book begin with her own story of moving from a mansion in Massachusetts to a drafty, rat-infested shack "in the colored section," at the corner of Merritt Mill Road and Cameron Avenue, and go on from there to examine the lives of professor Horace Williams, writer Betty Smith (A Tree Grows in Brooklyn, Joy in the Morning) and founder of the Intimate Bookshop Ab Abernethy.

Athas elucidates the origin of the town's "Communist Hill" moniker, and reminds us of a shameful past, when Carrboro rednecks threatened to kill novelist Richard Wright if he ventured into "their" town. She recounts the story of the rape and murder of 72-year-old Rachel Crook, a family friend and owner of a fish and nuts store in the building that now houses Crook's Corner, and then proceeds to celebrate the nearby bicycle path that now connects Chapel Hill and Carrboro.

Much of this is territory covered in Athas' highly-acclaimed 1971 novel Entering Ephesus, which is set (pseudonymously) in the Chapel Hill and Carrboro of the late 1930s and early '40s. That book's unflinchingly honest portrayal of adolescent intellectual and emotional awakening parallels Athas' own youth in Chapel Hill, beginning with her arrival in 1938. Athas sees the Chapel Hill of that time as having helped shape her development as a writer: "(B)ecause there were writers here, and because there was this marvelous spirit of inquiry, it made it exciting and much easier to follow that path. It was filled with people who were tolerant and ahead of their time."

The Athas family in the kitchen of the Shack, Thanksgiving, circa 1946..

PHOTOS BY ARTHUR LAVINE

Athas in turn helped shape the local literary landscape, both by the attention her success as a writer brought and her 41 years as a lecturer in creative writing at UNC, where Will Blythe and Randall Kenan were among many who benefited from her guidance. With Chapel Hill in Plain Sight, she helps to shape our sense of ourselves, as well as that of our ever-changing surroundings.

Athas values what has gone before without disparaging what replaces it. She points out that, "Geography has more influence than we think. But once it has been turned into something absolutely other, the past thing is wiped out. People forget. Is that bad or good? It is both." So when asked if she regrets the many changes in Carrboro, the town in which she's spent most of her life, she quotes Edith Piaf: "Je ne regrette rien," "I regret nothing."

Readers who missed Daphne Athas' recent appearances at the Regulator and the Bull's Head still have several opportunities to meet her. Athas is scheduled to discuss and sign her new book at McIntyre's Books this Saturday at 11 a.m.; Flyleaf Books on Nov. 14 at 2 p.m.; Southwest Regional Library in Durham on Dec. 4 at 2 p.m.; and Quail Ridge Books & Music in Raleigh on Dec. 8 at 7:30 p.m.

Local cooks had a rare opportunity to meet Diana Kennedy, legendary cookbook author and expert on Mexican cooking, this past Sunday. Kennedy came to Flyleaf Books to discuss and sign Oaxaca Al Gusto, a true labor of love that's been 14 years in the making. The story Kennedy told of traveling in her truck, with a sleeping bag and cot, to collect recipes throughout Oaxaca was fascinating. And her passion for preserving those recipes, as well as the rare ingredients they require, was infectious.

"The book belongs to the wonderful people who let me sit in their kitchens for hours," Kennedy says. If you're a fan of authentic Mexican cooking, this book belongs in your kitchen. The tasty snacks attendees enjoyed, created by Foster's Market from Kennedy's recipes, were proof of that.

SPOTLIGHT OCSC CUSTOMER APPRECIATION DAY

OCSC CUSTOMER APPRECIATION DAY

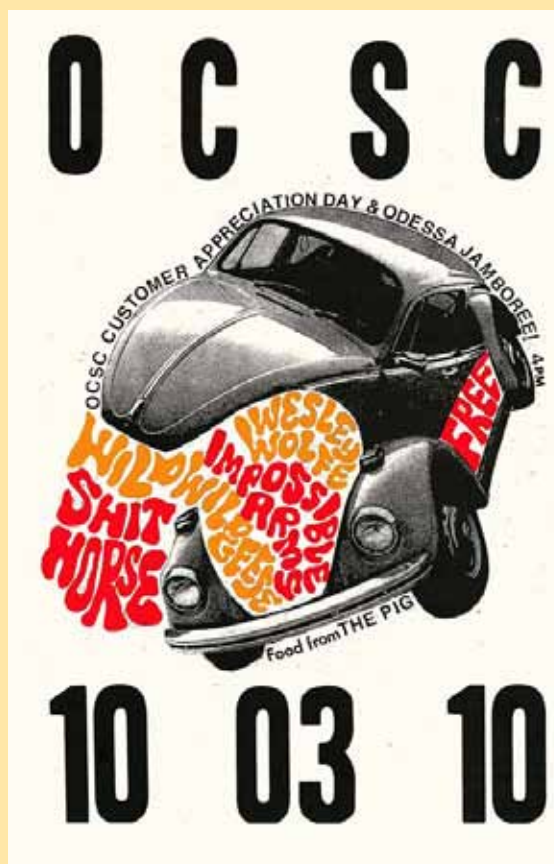

Gee, nine years already? Seems like it was only yesterday when a collection of contractors, future customers and new employees pounded all those dents into the copper bartop at the Orange County Social Club.

Each year, the club hosts a customer appreciation day featuring free food and live music in the gravel lot behind 108 E. Main St., and if you're one of the 6,000 or so members (or one of their guests) you can celebrate year nine with food from The Pig (the Weaver Dairy road successor to the Barbecue Joint) and music from Carrboro's own Odessa Records. There's also a raffle to benefit Odessa's efforts to put out music by local bands.

Odessa's Paul Finn says he looking forward to a swell afternoon with a lineup from the label's roster, featuring Wesley Wolfe, Impossible Arms, Wild Wild Geese and Sh*t Horse.

"OCSC has long been an unofficial HQ for the label and many of its artists. Over the years, many bands and their ideas were formulated at the bar," Finn says.

The show starts at 3 p.m. Feel free to drop by and formulate some ideas of your own.

Ashley Melzer writes the Gimme Five! column for The Carrboro Citizen's MILL blog (carrborocitizen.com/mill/tag/gimme-five), in which she asks local bands five probing questions. Below is a selection of favorites from the column to date.

ROB RUIN OF WILD WILD GEESE

TC: Describe the last time you totally geeked out about a song.

Ruin: As any of my friends can tell you, I was the obnoxious, music-pusher friend, cranking a car stereo and forcing passengers to suffer through whatever I was obsessing over at the time. Recently, it has been this track "Ocean City" by Kurt Vile, a warbling, stripped-down acoustic pop gem that cross fades into an ambient, spaced-out keyboard line. Two instruments, vocals, perfection.

PHIL BLANK OF GMISH

TC: What are a few inspirations or influences that would really surprise people?

Blank: Most of my inspiration comes from local traditions to which I was not "kin" but was lucky enough to experience in raw, unamplified and casual contexts. Seeing my wife sing gospel music from her youth and seeing her relationship to it was a demonstration of the emotional potential of that music and an inspiration for me to never (never never ever) try that myself. Hearing David Long play Bill Monroe-style mandolin helped me understand the blunt overpowering punch that can be in traditional music. It is something that doesn't always come across on recordings and seems to be rapidly fading. I once watched my friend Ben Hartlage listen to the Stanley Brothers and I heard the resolute male humility and regret in Carter's voice (I was always distracted by Ralph's part). I've been lucky enough to have dozens of these moments and they really gave me an ear for hearing things in klezmer and other music from the same period in history.

JOE NORKUS OF EMBARRASSING FRUITS

TC: What can listeners expect from the new album?

Norkus: Aural orgasm.... No, but seriously – there's more collaboration. Our bass player has been writing more and singing/playing guitar on some stuff. A lot of it has a more classic rock feel, mixed with the '90s sounds on some of our earlier records. We worked really hard on little lead guitar things. We recorded it to tape too, so there's a bigger, warmer sound.

IN THE YEAR OF THE PIG

TC: Describe your typical band practice.

7:30 p.m.: Arrive early and head over to Tienda Don Jose for a Topo Chico and a 32 oz. Carta Blanca; 7:45 p.m.: Sit in alley and discuss world events as other folks arrive; 8:00 p.m.: Get stuff inside and see what equipment is broken this week; 8:15 p.m.: Cantwell leads a brief service; 8:20 p.m.: Break; 8:27 p.m.: Tuning; 8:30 p.m.: Jams; 9:00 p.m.: More jams; 9:30 p.m.: Even more jams; 10:00 p.m.: Maybe even more jams; 10:15 p.m.: Discussion that maybe we really are just a jam band; 10:30 p.m.: David Harper distributes theory worksheet for homework with a firm hand and serious countenance

STUART EDWARDS OF OLD BRICKS

TC: What did you dream of being when you were a kid? How'd that turn out?

Edwards: NBA star dream died in sixth grade.
